Mayor Emanuel turned his attention to plowing residential streets Monday as he tried to head off the frustration that can grow into political problems for a mayor who Chicagoans believe has mishandled a big snowfall weeks before an election.

Hundreds of plows started working their way along side streets Monday morning after spending the previous 36 hours clearing and reclearing arterial routes while more than 19 inches of snow fell, the city's fifth-largest amount recorded.

It's standard operating procedure for city plows to concentrate on main streets as long as the snow keeps coming down, which it did heavily all day and into the night Sunday. But Emanuel knows there's a shelf life to the benefit of the doubt Chicagoans will give him as they struggle to dig out trapped cars from deep drifts in streets and alleys to get to work and drop their kids at school. So he repeatedly thanked residents for their patience during an afternoon news conference with more than a dozen city department heads.

The mayor normally arrives for such public events impeccably attired in bespoke suits but turned up at the city's 911 center for the Monday snow update wearing jeans, boots and a sweater with the sleeves literally rolled up.

"As you know, this has been a snowstorm for the record books, and we're seeing a record response as well, by both city employees, residents and businesses," he said. "I want to thank all the city residents for their patience."

Underscoring the deeply political nature of Chicago blizzards in election years, mayoral challenger 2nd Ward Ald. Bob Fioretti was waiting for reporters outside the 911 center following Emanuel's update to blast the mayor for what he claimed was mishandling the storm cleanup.

"I think overall, the city, this administration, has done a miserable job on what we're seeing here in the streets," said Fioretti, who has been aggressive in his criticism of Emanuel as he tries to gain traction for his underfunded campaign. A recent Tribune poll showed him at 10 percent and in third place behind Emanuel and Cook County Commissioner Jesus "Chuy" Garcia with the election coming up Feb. 24.

As the city emerged from the blizzard, residents in some neighborhoods commended city leaders for managing a snowstorm that caught many by surprise. Though there were delays and traffic accidents, some said the city deserved credit for handling the storm without major cancellations.

"The city did their thing," said Elige Scott, 33, of Englewood. "They did it. When I woke up, my street was clear. I saw the trucks out. They really did it."

In Englewood and Auburn Gresham, some people said they were pleased to find their main streets and some of the side streets plowed. But in other neighborhoods, like Bronzeville and Woodlawn, some roads were impassible. Drivers hustled to dig out cars that were stuck in the middle of the streets.

Ikhlas Saleem, 25, said she could have caught the bus from her Bronzeville home to the Loop to make it to work Monday. But she opted to work remotely from a neighborhood cafe closer to her house.

"My car is in a garage, and I just didn't feel like dealing with it," she said.

Even then, Saleem said she still ended up on public transportation because she couldn't walk in the streets or sidewalk to get to where she needed to go.

"The streets were really bad," Saleem said. "It was too crazy. There was a car stuck in the middle of the street on my

4G connection could mean new CTA habits

Tracy

When Daniel Kelly gets ready to leave for work in the morning, he usually has to make a tough call.

Kelly said he can ride the Red Line from his Lakeview home to his River North marketing job, which is faster than the Brown Line, where trains can travel 15 miles

4G just gives the rude and

way to be rude and the no-music rule."

inconsiderate another

inconsiderate, and train

operators never enforce per hour because of track conditions. But a ride on the Brown Line means he can surf the Internet, send emails and make calls because the train doesn't go underground.

Getting work done during a Brown Line ride typically wins over zoning out in a Red Line ride, Kelly said.

Later this year, though, Kelly expects to choose the Red Line more often. The CTA announced last week that four major wireless providers-T-Mobile, AT&T, Verizon, and Sprint-will pay $32.5 million to install a 4G wireless network this year in CTA subways, which would allow Red Line and Blue Line riders to better connect to the Internet with their smartphones while they are underground.

"It's a lot more convenient to have access to [the Internet]," said Kelly, 30.

Like Kelly, some Chicago commuters who talked to RedEye said they may ride the Red Line and Blue Line trains more frequently when the 4G network replaces the subways' 10-year-old 2G network. Other riders said the network change also will make them change their riding habits—by taking the CTA less so they can avoid riders talking loudly on their phones.

Northwestern English professor Bill Savage said he typically rides the Red and Purple lines once a week. He said about half the time he rides he encounters another passenger yelling into a cellphone or loudly playing music, which is against CTA rules. The change to 4G will encourage him to ride his hybrid mountain bike more often, he said.

"4G just gives the rude and inconsiderate another way to be rude and inconsiderate, and train operators never enforce the no-music rule," said Savage, who lives in Rogers Park.

The CTA said it plans to tackle phone courtesy in an etiquette campaign the agency expects to roll out in the spring. In 2009, the CTA posted ads telling riders "Don't Yell on Your Cell." The campaign encouraged riders to text instead of call, talk softly on their phones and switch phone ringtones to vibrate. The new campaign will be part of a larger marketing push that reminds riders not to eat, litter or take up too much space, the CTA said.

Riders will have a few months to learn their manners. CTA spokeswoman Catherine Hosinski said the agency expects to begin activating 4G at Blue Line stations this summer and at Red Line stations after that.

When the CTA last year announced it was installing 4G service, the agency said riders would see the service on the Blue Line in the > spring and on the Red Line later in the year.

When it does arrive, the addition of 4G service may be most noticeable in the Loop area. where underground Red Line and Blue Line stations are some of the most populous stations.

Blue Line trains travel underground between the Clinton stop on the Near West Side and the Division stop in West Town, and at a few Northwest Side Blue Line stops, including the Logan Square stop. The Red Line subway runs from the Roosevelt stop in the South Loop to the North/Clybourn stop on the Near North Side.

Chicago will be the largest public transit system in the country with 4G coverage in all subway stations and tunnels, city officials said.

The expansion of the wireless network also may mean more riders will have their phones out, which could mean more thefts.

Chicago police logged 666 cellphone thefts on CTA property last year, down from 1,160 phone thefts in 2013, according to department statistics. Already this year, there have been a few high-profile phone thefts in or near CTA stations including at the Wilson Red Line stop in Uptown and the Main Purple Line stop in Evanston. Arrests were made in both cases.

Karen Lewis blasts Rauner

Chicago Tribune

Chicago Teachers Union President Karen Lewis pilloried Gov. Rauner on Monday and promised the CTU would not back down from Springfield or City Hall as it prepares demands for a new contract.

"Bruce Rauner ran on a platform about nothing," Lewis said Monday at a City Club of Chicago luncheon. "He's wasted no time attacking the wages of working-class people, attacking their labor unions and threatening massive cuts to social service programs, which help the most vulnerable people in our state.

"That is the real Bruce Rauner. He's not some easygoing, blue-jeans-wearing, $20-dollar-watch-having good guy who's coming to save the day. He is [Wisconsin Gov.] Scott Walker on steroids."

Lewis offered a steady stream of wisecracks and improvised passages in which she derided standardized testing, Mayor Emanuel's longer school day and private partnerships in public

Lewis, who was considered a prime challenger to Emanuel until she was diagnosed with a malignant brain tumor in October, criticized the mayor's "hedge fund homies" and his fight to maintain an appointed Board of Education.

But Rauner received particular attention from Lewis, who said the governor was "busy trying to make the term 'collective bargaining' into dirty words." Rauner, she said, "thinks that only certain people are worthy of a highquality education."

"If there's any silver lining, it is in the fact that no governor can rule by fiat. He's going to have to learn to listen to everyday citizens that he spent nearly $30 million of his own money to represent," she said. "And he's going to have to learn to work with organized labor."

The Republican governor in a speech last week revived his anti-union rhetoric and blamed what he said was an unfriendly state business climate on an alliance among Democrats who get strong labor support and reward workers with costly benefits.

Rauner flashed a chart that listed a series of unions, including representatives of teachers and blue-collar workers, as he lambasted a "conflict of interest" and "corrupt" alliance in which big labor campaign contributions support Democratic candidates to reap better state benefits and higher wages on public works projects.

In her speech, Lewis promoted her mayoral candidate, Cook County Commissioner Jesus "Chuy" Garcia, and described the illness that forced her to abandon her mayoral ambitions as "an unfortunate moment in our movement.

"This is sort of a relay race, I simply pass the baton to the better runner ahead of me," Lewis said.

Lewis said the union would soon have ready its proposals for a new contract and that they will require resources from the cash-strapped school district.

"If you want well-resourced schools, educators with tenure and job security—it's going to cost money. We shouldn't shy away from this," Lewis said. "Great working conditions for educators are also great learning conditions for our students."

The body of 20-year-old Vicente Mundo, a University of Illinois student from Back of the Yards, was found Saturday morning along a rural road near the small town of Tolono, according to the Champaign County Sheriff's Office. Authorities said they were "treating this as a homicide" but would not say how he died.

Rauner issues medical marijuana licenses

Gov. Rauner on Monday issued licenses for groups that will be allowed to grow and sell medical marijuana. Of the 22 cultivation centers allowed under the law, Rauner granted permits for 18 companies to begin operating. Another three are under additional review, while one district did not receive any applications. The Rauner administration issued licenses to 53 organizations to operate dispensaries where patients will be able to buy the drug, with five more under further review.

Cook County jail put on indefinite lockdown

Cook County Jail was ordered into an indefinite lockdown Monday because more than a third of its employees didn't show up to work during the blizzard Sunday and into Monday, according to the Cook County Sheriff's Office. More than 100 officers were ordered to work overtime to make up for the lack of staff, the statement said.

Obama unveils $4B budget

Promising to help America's middle class, President Obama on Monday sent Congress a record $4 trillion budget that would hammer corporate profits overseas and raise taxes on the wealthy while boosting tax credits for families and the working poor.

Obama's budget also would steer hundreds of billions of dollars to the nation's crumbling infrastructure of roads and bridges, help provide two years of free community college and reverse the across-the-board, automatic budget cuts that have slammed the Pentagon and nearly every government department.

The blueprint for the 2016 budget year that begins Oct. 1 represents a 6.4 percent increase over estimated spending this year, projecting that the deficit will decline to $474 billion.

However, Obama's plan ignores the new balance of power in Washington, with Republicans running both the House and Senate. The GOP found plenty to criticize in his proposed tax hikes that would total about $1.5 trillion.

"Today President Obama laid out a plan for more taxes, more spending, and more of the Washington gridlock that has failed middle class families," said House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio. "This plan never balances-ever."

Republicans will respond this spring with their own plan, a balanced-budget outline.

"These proposals are practical, not partisan," Obama said of his overall plans. "They'll help working families feel more secure with paychecks that go further, help American workers upgrade their skills so they can compete for higher-paying jobs, and help create the conditions for our businesses to keep generating good new jobs for our workers to fill."

RedEve

A decade ago, a handful of employees began building what would eventually become a thriving WNBA franchise.

Driving the Sky train was Chicago-area businessman Michael Alter, who pursued the endeavor because of what the team could accomplish in the social arena.

"[I thought] that these women are incredible role models is what this league stands for in terms of empowering not just young girls but young boys too, and to see women in a different light—it was just too important for Chicago not to be part of this thing," Alter, the team's principal owner, said of the team's inception.

The Sky kick off the celebration of their 10th anniversary Wednesday by announcing its season-long initiatives. They also will host 100 girls as part of an expo in support of National Girls and Women in Sports Day.

Naturally, it took time for the Sky to establish themselves in the league. Now? They enter 2015 as defending Eastern Conference champs.

THEY CAN LAUGH ABOUT IT NOW

As the Sky begin celebrating their 10th anniversary this week, three people have been on board since the franchise began: founder and principal owner Michael Alter; chairman and minority owner Margaret Stender, who served as the team's first president and CEO; and Michelle Henstock, who started with the organization as an intern and now is vice president of operations. All three shared moments that couldn't help but make them smile. REDEYE

"Last year, making the finals was clearly the culmination of everything we had to do over the past nine years previously. It wasn't iust on the basketball court ... but we also had a sold-out crowd and it was kind of ironic to be playing at UIC Pavilion, which is where we started and had left, but because Garth Brooks was at Allstate [Arena] we had to go back there. That was kind of weird, but to have a full house was very exhilarating and a great exclamation mark on the whole experience."

-Michael Alter

"It really didn't matter what your job was [early on]. If you were a ticket salesperson, you were going to help set up the event and get the stuff to the event. If I'm doing retail, I'm going to help the ticket sales people do stuff. We just chipped in on everything. ... How the hell did we manage a professional team with [less than 20] people?

I look back and I laugh and I think, how did we make that happen?" -Michelle Henstock

"In the early days before we had any athletes, the league would sometimes send athletes to help us as we talked about the business and the potential with those in the business community. I remember them one time being kind enough to send Lisa Leslie to Chicago. ... So Lisa is 6-5, from Southern California, came to Chicago in the dead of winter, in January with three coats. And one of them was a giant yellow windbreaker that would fit over the other two coats that she was wearing because it was so cold. So Michael and I took Lisa to lunch and we were walking through the financial business district ... she looked like Big Bird. ... We're not small people, but we're not [6-5]. And walking around with Lisa in this giant yellow coat, with two coats underneath, it was hilarious."

-Margaret Stender

Did the Bowl trailers get your movie-loving heart racing?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

We've come to expect that at least 82 percent of Super Bowl commercials will be absolutely terrible. But the movie trailers are another story entirely. Sunday was a big day for world premiere trailers and extended looks at projects we're already well aware of (ahem, "Jurassic World"). We took another look at some of 2015's biggest projects to see whether we went to bed more or less excited to sit through them—with a giant popcorn bucket, natch.

DAMORAN@REDEYECHICAGO.COM | @REDEYEDANA

FURIOUS 7

OK, we're still not SUPER cool with this movie exploiting star Paul Walker's death. But Vin Diesel jumps a sports car from one skyscraper to another, then jumps out before the car falls hundreds of feet to the ground. Which is pretty baller.

BEFORE: CHECKING OUR PHONES AFTER: INTRIGUED

TOMORROWLAND

While details are still secretive, the George Clooney flick looks like it might finally bring our fantasies about Disneyland's Tomorrowland area to life. Or maybe we've just ridden Space Mountain a few too many times.

BEFORE: INTRIGUED AFTER: RIVETED

CHECKING OUR PHONES

WATCHING

We hadn't heard of this Jeff Bridges flick before Sunday, and it looks like it just might be trying to capitalize on "Game of Thrones" fantasy mania. Still, you don't get a movie about a guy with four arms every day.

BEFORE: NAPPING AFTER: WATCHING

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

Even though it's so 2008, Lonely Island's "Like a Boss" still makes us smile. Which is why we looked up and started paying attention when this teaser for Vince Vaughn's latest copy of his past five movies started. But then Dave Franco got hit by a dart and everything was terrible.

BEFORE: NAPPING AFTER: CHECKING OUR PHONES

INSIDE OUT

The next Pixar movie looks like it plays on stereotypes pretty hard, and while this ad DOES feature the Puppy Bowl puppies, there's no way they'll appear in the actual movie. RedEye is not a fan of fake footage, people.

BEFORE: WATCHING AFTER: CHECKING OUR PHONES

Super fans unite!

Seahawks fan Chris Pratt (right) and Patriots fan Chris Evans didn't let a little friendly competition get in the way of making some kids happy. Though Pratt lost their Super Bowl bet, both buds will visit children's hospitals in Seattle and Boston dressed as Star Lord and Captain America, respectively, according to their tweets Sunday. We can't promise any epic battles during their trips, though.

THE QUOTE
At the end of the day, it doesn't matter if he's a sponge or a stone; he's a being that they created with a soul that is beautiful."

-Antonio Banderas, to The Hollywood Reporter, on SpongeBob SquarePants. Banderas is the only liveaction character in "The SpongeBob Movie: Sponge Out of Water," and we can't say we've ever heard someone wax so philosophically about a pends on which dude you think is most hilarious. The two took to the stage Sunday night with Jimmy Fallon to duke it out with Beyonce, glitter, John Legend and general hilarity. We're all winners, really.

THE DIGIT

That's how many episodes are in the "Heroes Reborn" limited series debuting soon on NBC. A new teaser trailer that debuted Sunday revealed that original cast member Jack Coleman is back, and Zachary Levi is on board as a new character. No cheerleader this time, guys?

The outdoorsv tvpe Sure. Gisele Bundchen's life is all runways and limos now, but that wasn't always the case. "My earliest memory was going to my grandma's house, milking the cows and collecting the eggs from the chickens," she told British Vogue. "If I could choose, I'd be bare feet, with animals all around me and living in a tree house. Like Tarzan and Jane, that's my dream. I'm at my happiest around nature." Girl, you CAN choose, you probably have enough money to quit working and be OK.

Hands-on movie

Jamie Dornan (right) and Dakota Johnson have their hands all over each other in "Fifty Shades of Grey," so it shouldn't come as a huge shocker that the body part is a turn-on for both stars. "My wife [Amelia Warner] has my favorite hands in the world. Being from Northern Ireland, I'm programmed to enjoy stories, so I find it sexy if a woman can tell a funny story. And I've always found attractive talking to someone who's achieved something that I couldn't," Dornan told Glamour magazine. Johnson added: "Like Jamie, I like good hands. Manly hands. I grew up in Colorado, and there are manly men there, so manliness is attractive to me." Sensitive dudes need not apply.
